

Stars, reflections of love

Even in the darkest of nights, full with pain, loss and defeat, like little diamonds in the sky stars still shine so bright.

Stars are reflections of light, providing hope and solace for those in pain and anguish that somehow soon for them all will turn out for the better.

Because what lights up the stars?
What provides them the light to reflect?
Little loving acts, somewhere on earth, are the origin of enlightenment for nightly skies.

May you please learn that every loving act by you provides a star the power and right to shine brightly into the night, therewith becoming someone else's proof that love and hope do still exist.

May you please look up into heaven and see millions and millions of little diamonds of light shining just for you to know forever that even the darkest of pitch-black nights is enlightened by a trillion-fold acts of love.